Munich Mining show – Day 1

Munich Mining Show – Day 1

The first day of the Munich show was lively, well attended, and with more companies than the last few years.

A few familiar faces from London walking around, but by and large this is an all German affair.

Below are some photos taken on day 1 of the Munich show, November 2018.

I will be giving my thoughts once the show is over, but it was good to feel come real optimism from individual companies, including some I met that we cover here on this website.

Some of the companies we cover have some potential game changing events coming up, no guarantees of course, but for some, the patience through the difficult times may be about to pay off.

I enjoyed meeting several new companies and will try and bring the best of them to present to us in due course.

Historic vehicle amongst the audience in the Munich Tram Museum!

Tudor Gold stand is busy at Munich 2018

A packed audience awaits the presentations to commence.

Amir Adnani of UEC updates an investor.

Highly visible gold from this drill core from Quebec! 96 ounces per ton of gold

Lump of gold from a mine in Western Australia