As an American Creek Shareholder I had mixed feelings abour being acquired, despite the healthy premium being offered, as I felt the higher gold price would lead to some corporate activity sooner or later.

When I learned that this acquisition by Cunningham Mining is being funded by a token issuance, I started to have serious doubts as to whether they can pull this off.

Details of the token are now emerging, and I still have doubts as to whether this idea will work.

If it does work it breaks new ground for mining investment, if it doesn't, the share price will halve in short order I would imagine.

I have considered selling my stock and buying the token, but decided against it for now, but am considering a small investment in the token, and I have applied for details.

My final thought is that I have my doubts whether this acquisition will go through, and the market seems to agree with me as the share price is holding at around two thirds of the offer price, yet nobody is rushing in to try and make an easy buck.

Not for widows or ophans.
