Comment

Colonial Coal have been caught in a triple vortex of news all coming together that resulted in one spooked investor dumping 350,000 shares into the market in one go early Thursday morning, and hammering down the shareprice as a result.

This was amateur hour, and cost the seller severely as the price plunged, as buyers retreated as they saw the size of the volume on the ask.

The events that led up to this were the announcement by Tech that they have done a deal with Conuma in respect of their Peace River assets, when some thought Colonial may have been looking for that deal, the Sukunka licence denial announcement by Glencore, and of course the old favourite, Canadian tax loss selling.

Colonial could have taken any one of these events in it's stride, maybe two, but all three at the same time? Sadly it spooked someone, and they panic sold without trying to place the stock first, or sell in small chunks, and that caused today's price slump.
