

Mines and Money London 2018 Day 4

Mines and Money London 2018 – Day 4

The final day of Mines and Money London 2018 was a quite affair, as is usual after the intensity of the other days, and post show frivolities in the local hostelryes all take their toll.

The atmosphere is always a bit like the night after the party on the last day, everything is slow and subdued

.

.

.

.

Mines and Money London 2018 – Day 4

The final day of Mines and Money London 2018 was a quite affair, as is usual after the intensity of the other days, and post show frivolities in the local hostelryes all take their toll.

The atmosphere is always a bit like the night after the party on the last day, everything is slow and subdued, but people are still in meetings and the show goes on, albeit rather delicately in some cases.

I had a brief meeting with Richard Williams of Strongbow Exploration, {TSX.V: SBW} and he confirmed their AIM dual listing was on track, and they are working with sources of finance to complete the capex funding.

I went round to say goodbye to Rob at RNC, and stare one last time at the gold bearing rocks they brought across from Australia, that were the star of the show, easily the best ever display on any booth I have ever seen, or likely to see again, unless they bring them again next year of course!

After that, job done, on the early train home after a few exhausting days.