Gold and silver are volatile again after the New Year.

Gold is still hovering above $4,300, but silver remains around it's all-time high price as supply remains tight. The CME has twice raised margin requirements to try and curb speculators, but to no avail thus far.

Western Gold is about to become the next Australian producing gold miner, with a startup imminent in Q1 2026.

Western Gold are featured in our tier2 Watchlist as a late stage developer, early production company. Arrangements are now almost complete for production startup, and I expect the share price to run closer to the commencement of production.

I hold shares in Western Gold and recently added. I intend to rotate some profits from another company to increase my holding here in the near term to take advantage of any rise in share price that normally occurs as a developer enters production.
