City Investors Circle – Stocks to Watch in 2026 – Colonial Coal

Colonial is a coal exploration and development company based in the prolific Peace River area of British Columbia.

The company has a large metallurgical (steelmaking) coal asset surrounded by larger players. The company is looking to complete a corporate transaction in the near future.

Highlights

The company focuses on acquiring, exploring, and advancing high-quality metallurgical coal projects in Canada.

There is no current production as the company focus on its strengths, exploration and development, and has a pipeline aimed at supplying premium steelmaking coal, particularly for Asian markets.

There is a direct rail link from a line nearby direct to a port where the coal can be shipped to Asian markets in a shorter route than from Australia or southern Canadian ports, saving both time and money.

Next steps

The company recently announced a news release stating that it is in discussion with various entities about a potential corporate action, see here.

One can only hope that with the coking coal price moving upwards slowly, that the near future will see a corporate action that enhances shareholder value.

CEO David Austin has overseen two major coal deals before , both in British Columbia, so has the experience required to negotiate to create shareholder value.

Conclusion

Colonial is a company looking to either sell one or both of its assets, or potentially become part of a greater entity, all options are currently open.

Given the success David Austin has delivered previously, there's certainly a reason for cautious optimism amongst shareholders, of which I'm one.

Colonial Coal (TSX.V: CAD)

Is the subject of a new research report by respected analyst Tormont.

The updated report adds depth to the current metallurgical (coking) coal market and the various players involved in the machinations of M & A.

Colonial Coal is a metallurgical (coking) coal explorer in the Peace River area of British Columbia, Canada.

Colonial has a large circa 800m ton resource of premium grade steelmaking coal adjoining other major projects, close to rail transportation infrastructure, with access to a west coast port for export routes to Japan, China, and India.

Sea routes are closer than from Vancouver and the Newcastle port, in Australia, lowering shipping costs and transportation time.
