Mining Review 9th July 2023

Another lacklustre week, for want of a better adjective, there's simply no excitement in the junior mining sector at the moment.

Scotgold was the subject of a reprimand to the BBC after it was described in an interview as having discovered a new vein, when in fact they hadn't.

A poor week for companies we follow, with Argosy Minerals suffering from a falling lithium price and Cyprium Metals announcing the dreaded words “strategic review”. I’m pleased and relieved I sold Cyprium as a hedge against any financing issues, and I was only concerned about the price and what dilution might occur, rather than if it might happen.

The main issue of the week is about a company we don't follow on this website, but I have followed personally since visiting the mine a few years ago, Scotgold.

I would like to see a revival of mining in the UK, and Scotgold, with their mine at Tyndrum in central Scotland was at the forefront.

Scotgold are in production although they have been struggling a bit financially, so decided to raise additional funds via a placing. In mid February they announced a £3 million placing at 40p per share, to directors, institutions, and a retail placing.

Fast forward to this week and a disastrous production update was released, and they announced they needed £500,000 fast after mining into some barren rock! The shareprice is now 15p!

The obvious questions are what has happened to the £3.5 million raised just six weeks ago? And when did the company know they had found a barren area in the mine?

It almost beggars belief they have gone from gold rich rock to barren rock within such a short period.

Surely the exchange should be looking at this?

Companies on our Watchlist making news this week.

Scotgold Plummets After Market Update

Scotgold (ASX / AIM: SCZ)

Scotgold shares plummeted over 63% today after a disastrous market update, where the company highlighted production problems and a lack of cash.

This comes a month or so after a recent placing, and the obvious question is what did they know before they raised the funds? Investors who paid 40p per share cannot be happy.

Scotgold Shares Plummet 63% in a Day after a Production Update

Scotgold (ASX / AIM: SCZ) shares plummeted over 63% today after a disastrous market update, where the company highlighted production problems and a lack of cash.

This comes a month or so after a recent placing, see here, on February 16th, where the company raised £3 million by issuing shares at 40p.

The obvious question is what did they know before they raised the funds? Investors who paid 40p per share cannot be happy at losing 66% of their funds in 6 weeks!

It beggars belief that the company were not aware of problems barely six weeks ago, and where has all the money raised then gone?

Investors will rightly be asking some hard questions of management.
