Silver Price Hits An All-Time High – The price of silver

registered an all-time high on Friday 28th November, caused by a structural supply deficit as demand from the electronics, EV industries, and investment increases.

The projected shortfall in supply for 2025 is projected to be 100 – 150 million ounces.

New supply is constrained as most silver is produced as a bi-product of mining other commodities. Pure silver miners are rare.

Industrial use now accounts for around 50% of supply, with solar now accounting for 20% of total silver demand.

This augurs well for investors owning shares in silver stocks in production or close to production and fully funded.
