City Investors Circle Mining Review 22nd March 2026

An absolutely horrendous week for investors in the mining space, with the price of gold falling a whopping 11% in a week, and silver down 16%.

Mining companies' shares were clobbered on the market, despite some releasing excellent results, the market was unforgiving and merciless.

This was my worst ever week as an investor, where my stocks were virtually all marked down severely as a result of a falling gold price. Some have fallen 33% in a couple of weeks despite producing gold and complying to their previously announced guidance, and despite the geopolitical events ongoing that would normally benefit the gold price, such as the Iran war.

Gold is, in fact, still UP on a year to date basis, it's sentiment that has changed, and I wonder what the catalyst will be to break the falling price?

I attended the Swiss Mining Conference in Zurich this week, and companies present were putting a brave face on their falling shareprices, but the mood was fairly sombre and a few were even non-attendees.

I met some decent new stories and continue to research both new and existing holdings to make up a by list for when the market turns, which it will do at some point, it always does.

Swiss Mining Conference Day 1

Swiss Mining Conference

The first day of the Swiss mining conference was busy, but the atmosphere muted due to the falling price of gold.

My meeting list shrank by three meetings with those companies scratching from the show at the last minute.

Typical scene from the conference

Swiss Mining Conference Day 1

Swiss Mining Conference – The first day of the Swiss Mining Conference was busy, but the atmosphere muted, due to the falling price of gold.

My meeting list shrank by three meetings with those companies scratching from the show at the last minute. I wondered if it was because of the worsening gold price and market sentiment?

So, whilst the investors showed up, despite the sliding gold price, some of the companies didn't.

I thought I had a good meeting list, some current holdings with a couple of companies I really wanted to meet, plus a few speculative meetings to fill up the schedule.

Sadly G Mining Ventures, and Challenger Gold cancelled, leaving a hole in my schedule, in which I had already created a couple of holes intentionally for note writing, coffees, connecting with other investors, and comfort breaks.

This newly created large hole in the meeting schedule lead me downstairs to listen to some of the presentations, and by chance I listened to Fury Gold. Serendipity it turned out as I really liked the story, and I had time to follow up my interest on the stand with the CEO afterwards with another investor from the presentation.

I am going to research further but I liked the presentation and the company look to be at an interesting stage, given recent developments.

My first meeting was with Alex Scanlon, CEO of Barton Gold. I am a long term shareholder, and Alex confirmed all is on track, and the company will be issuing a wave of news during 2036, as they approach initial production at the beginning of 2027.

I also met Taslisker Resources, another story I liked, and the company looks undervalued, but the reason for that is probably the lack of a PEA or feasibility study.

The last company that I really liked was Capitan Silver, an emerging silver exploration company fully funded for a large exploration program this year. Despite the name, they do have a couple of gold prospects surrounding the expanding silver resource.

I finished off the first day by meeting Silver Tiger Metals, which is on track to commence open pit production in Mexico after having received the first open pit mining permit issued by the Mexican government for several years.

Tomorrow I have eight more meetings, sadly only two or three of real interest, but you never know, like Fury Gold today, a company can surprise to the upside.

Swiss Mining Conference – Zurich 2025

City Investors Circle Mining Review 23rd November 2025

Mining Review 23rd November 2025

A week dominated by the first mining conferences of the season in London and Zurich.

Mining stocks took a hammering, but I met a few new companies I like the look of and I feel merit further research.

The 121 Mining Conference in London seemed well attended but it's always hard to gauge because most booths have two company representatives, making estimating the number of investors present difficult to assess.

I personally didn't think it was so vibrant, but that's probably because of the falling mining stock prices affecting my mood.

I had some interesting meetings though and am currently deciding whether to invest in any of the companies I met.

I then met 55 North at a private luncheon presentation. This company is run by an experienced and successful mining CEO, Bruce Reid of Carlisle fame.

I like this story a lot and have decided to make an initial investment.

The Zurich Mining Show was the largest to far, and filled the room. What I like about this show is that, unlike the PDAC, you can meet the company CEOs on their stand, rather than a university student filling in for a pittance.

All the companies at the show have substance, it's not cheap to participate here, so early stage explorers in moose pasture are nowhere to be seen.

This makes for a good show and I had numerous meetings with solid companies. As a result I am reviewing three potential investments in new companies that look to have my key criteria, Tier 1 jurisdiction, strong management, funded to near term production in a project with scale.

Once I have reviewed the companies I will add any I think deserve inclusion into the watchlists.

Swiss Mining Conference

Another day another mining conference, this one in Zurich, one of my favourites on the circuit.

I spoke with a CEO today whose company looks set to enter production late 2026, and feel it's time to make an investment. That CEO is Alan Carter of Cabral Gold.

Alan is British, has invested a large amount of his personal money into Cabral, supporting the company when raising finance was really tough, and the company are now preparing for trial production commencing at the end of next year.

Cabral has arranged a gold swap, with a rate of 10% interest, to finance the building of the plant. This is a novel approach and sets Cabral apart from the crowd. One wonders whether this may be emulated by other miners in the future?

So, Cabral plan a new Mineral Resource Estimate during mid 2026, and then to enter trial production by year end. For me this is the sweet spot, as the company climbs the final hill on the Lassonde curve towards production and cashflow.

The amount of gold permitted to be mined under a Brazilian trial production licence is quite generous, and will allow Cabral to generate some meaningful cash, plus expand its exploration projects, which will ensure plenty of newsflow and no stock dilution moving forwards.

Cabral's project is only 12 miles from G Mining Ventures' newly opened producing TZ mine, and they look an obvious predator at some point, given the close proximity.

I am planning to personally invest in Cabral in the near future.

Equinox Gold is a company I have not met for some time, so I was pleased to catchup with its IR guy today for the first time since the acquisition of Calibre mining to produce a solid mid-tier gold mining company with producing mines in five countries.

Equinox are running two large gold mines in Canada that are both starting up, with Valentine now up to commercial production, and Greenstone nearly there, but with a few teething troubles.

They are both throwing off cash, as are the former Calibre producing mines in Nicaragua.

The company has around $1.2 – $1.4 billion in debt, and the primary objective is to reduce that as fast as possible. The Pan gold mine in Nevada has been sold to Minera Alamos for around $115 million as a starter, and I feel the Nicaraguan mines may be next.

If the gold price remains at current levels, I feel the bulk of the debt will be gone by this time next year.

One other mining company I met today that has a project I like is Cerro de Pasco Resources, with a polymetallic tailings project in Peru.

I like tailings projects because the hard work has already been done, the ore is sitting at surface so doesn't have to be mined, reducing both costs and time.

The tailings in question are high-grade, and contain galium, a critical metal used to make microchips, and one on the USA's critical list.

Still a bit early stage , but the forthcoming catalysts are the acquisition of the remaining tailings, with a high copper content, and the acquisition of the Vulcan owned mining plant close by.

Mining is critical to the town of Cerro de Pasco, high up in the Andes with no other large employer, and was built to provide labour for the mine.

This is a story I will follow closely for now.
