Zentek Media Report Update – City Investors Circle Ceasing coverage

Zentek Ltd. (TSX.V: ZEN) have updated the market following a claim in the media that the company are in receipt of a court action by UK based Graphene Composites, alleging IP theft.

Zen made a initial response the same day, HERE

The company followed with a further response the following day, stating that it considers the claim “frivolous and without merit”, its response can be viewed HERE

Zentek (TSX.V: ZEN) have stated they received notice of the action on the 29th January, yet had not informed the market, until the media article was published, citing their “Frivolous and without merit” argument as a defence for not doing so. That of course is subjective, and exposes a grey area, where the market requires a company to disclose such actions, yet companies often use the “frivolous and without merit” response for not doing so.

I fundamentally disagree with this non disclosure by the company, I think they have a duty to inform shareholders of any action, and at the same time they can state why they contend that the action is without merit, and the steps they will take to defend it.

As a shareholder of a company I want transparency at all times, tell me the good and the bad, so I can make an informed decision based on the facts as presented.

By not informing shareholders, and allowing an investigative journalist to break the story, makes ZEN look less than transparent in my opinion, and raises a concern. Is there anything else we're not being told? is an obvious question.

I am personally unhappy that the information was not disclosed to the market in a timely manner, and was effectively put out by a third party, forcing ZEN to respond.

I emailed an employee of Zentek, one Sandra Lombardo, listed on their website HERE for clarification, and did not receive the courtesy of a reply from her. At the very least I would have expected her to acknowledge my email, even if she was not the right person to respond to my enquiry. This is very poor form in my book.

finally, we cover mining companies, and Zentek has morphed from being a graphite mine developer into developing advanced chemicals and coatings, another sector altogether, which we do not cover.

As a result I am very reluctantly ceasing coverage of Zentek, a former presenting company. The reasons are because they have not acted in a way that I would have liked them to, and I honestly believe they should have, and of course that they are no longer involved in the mining sector, this site's focus.

It's my personal decision, and some may think I'm being too harsh, and that's fine if you do, we all have different opinions and standards, that's what makes a market. I welcome your feedback on this issue.

I will treat any future non disclosures in the same way for any company on the watchlist, as it's important to be fair and consistent. One company that was to be included on the watchlist has already been cancelled, for a similar reason.

For anyone wishing to continue to follow the company in the future, Zentek's website can be accessed HERE

I wish the company and its shareholders well for the future.

For context, Zenyatta (now Zentek) presented to the circle a few times in London during the tenure of Aubrey Eveleigh, where he did a great job of creating awareness of the company, and graphite, in it's early stages.

Zentek Ltd. – Suspension of coverage

Zentek Ltd. (TSX.V: ZEN) are covered by this site because they have presented to us in London in the past, and the site is a reference point for those investors to follow the company's news in the future.

Today I have become aware of an accusation against the company on another website, which is quite serious. I am not going to publish it here as it is unsubstantiated at the moment.

I am trying to establish if the accusation is valid, so until I can do that, I am suspending coverage of Zentek on this website. I think everyone will agree that is the correct and responsible thing to do in the circumstances.

I have emailed Sandra Lombardo at Zentek, and the source of the accusation, asking for their comments.

As Zentek are applying to join the NASDAQ this will have to be resolved quickly in my view.

Looking at today's trading so far 17:40 UK time (09.03.22) the stock is not showing signs of a sell off, so either the article has not been distributed in Canada, or people are not aware of it, or they simply don't believe it.

Once I have solid information I will update this site, but will not be reporting Zentec's news in the meantime.

City Investors Circle – Mining Review Sunday Update 21st November 2021

Colonial Coal is surging again after the publication of a positive Canaccord Research report, highlighting the potential of the stock at current coking (steelmaking) coal prices.

Ascot Gold is also climbing, as some in the media speculate they could be the next takeover target. It's easy to see why they may be a target, but I personally hope they stay as they are, as I feel they have more to offer their shareholders, such as myself.

A higher US dollar sent precious metal and commodities prices lower on Friday, turning a good week into a negative.

What a pity the US dollar rose as gold and silver were on for a positive week before the late dollar rise. Still we have higher inflation figures to help carry the gold price higher, with the current US CPI causing forecasters to price in three interest rate rises in 2022, rather than two as previously calculated.

The second London mining conference since covid started was well attended last week, the first day was as busy as always, the second noticeably less so, with many diehards showing signs of fatigue after two hard days of meetings and networking by mid afternoon.

It was good to connect with old friends and connections after nearly two years, let's hope the rising UK covid numbers don't wipe out Mines and Money in December.

Stocks on our watchlist making news this week.
