I'm a little surprised this is still going ahead, I half expected a settlement and additions to the board, but obviously the two sides are far apart.

Normally in Canada ZEN would run a proxy where shareholders are called and persuaded to support the incumbent management in the vote, but that costs money, and ZEN are low on funds, so may not happen.

Without a proxy it will be interesting to see how much support the dissidents can muster, and whether they can carry the day, or whether management are entrenched. Normally management ultimately prevail, but not always.
